Relationships with children

Policy statement

At Goodstart Early Learning (Goodstart) our fundamental belief is that children's learning, development, and wellbeing are firmly anchored in reciprocal, responsive, and respectful relationships that are attuned to the context of children's lives within their families and community.

"Children thrive when families and educators work together in partnership to support young children's learning."
EYLF (DEEWR 2009 p.9)

Goodstart Early Learning recognises that young children thrive in early childhood settings when they have positive and secure relationships with educators who know how to nurture and stimulate their early learning, development, and wellbeing.

Goodstart educators create warm, trusting and secure relationships with individual children and between groups of children that are fundamental to children's emerging self-regulation, learning, development and well-being. (The Goodstart Practice Guide: 2016)

What does this policy apply to?

- Ensuring respectful and equitable relationships are developed and maintained with each child.
- Ensuring each child is supported to build and maintain sensitive and responsive relationships with other children and adults.

Ensuring respectful and equitable relationships are developed and maintained with each child:

Positive relationships between children and educators occur when educators take the time to get to know each child. Educators then use this information during interactions or planned experiences to connect with each child, which in turn promotes the child’s sense of belonging. Strong educator relationships with children are fundamental to ensure children’s learning, development and well-being. These relationships will continue to grow through responsive one-to-one interactions and conversations.

Educators will make themselves available to children for social interactions that are meaningful. Through both planned and spontaneous social interactions educators can promote children’s learning, development and well-being. It’s these social interactions that ensure children develop self-confidence, communication skills and social skills that support the accommodation of new ideas.

Through these interactions with children educators acknowledge that each child has their own individual abilities and needs. Educators are respectful of this knowledge and ensure every child feels included and secure. Educators make sure their environments are set up in a way that reflects every child, their family and community.

(NQS: 2018)
Ensuring each child is supported to build and maintain sensitive and responsive relationships with other children and adults;

As children play together in a positive, relationship-oriented environment educators will provide support and guidance to ensure children build upon and extend knowledge through collaborative relationships.

Educators take a positive approach to guiding children’s behaviour, in a way that promotes each child’s rights, dignity and agency at all times. Educators use guidance strategies and practices that support the needs of individual children, acknowledge possible reasons for behaviour and engage children to contribute to their own pro-social solutions. These strategies and practices will support children to acquire new skills and understandings to move towards positive (pro-social) behaviour.
